OLTOMARCHINE. New York lawyer, and presented her with a house on Fifth avenue and a check for $25,000 on the welding day. The bubble burst afew months after that, and for the next five years we heard of Paraff flying from the police in almost every country of the globe. It turned out that he had stolen from some French laboratory, in which he had been emthe black dve. They had genuine value, and would have sufficed to make his fortune. His process for getting gold out of copper ore was a swindle pure and sim-He was heard from in San Francisco, in Peru, in Brazil, in Holland, and next he may turn up among the child-

Paraff's legacy to America was the pro-cess for making bogus butter. The com-pany which worked it at first attempted to create a demand for oleomargarine as such. That led it to the verge of bank-ruptcy. Then the product was sold as butter, and the demand grew to be tremendous. The butter dealers took fright and managed to have a bill passed compelling every manufacturer of oleo to brand the tubs "oleomargarine." This law has proved ridicuously ineffective. New names have been used to cover the old fraud; we hear no more about oleo-margarine, but by looking carefully at the tubs from which the grocers deal out the "gilt-edged" butter, the brand "Butter-ine" may perhaps be found—butter in very large letters and ine in very Grocers usually so manage that the customer never happens to see this brand, but there it is in case some inspector comes around to make sure that all bogus butter tubs are properly branded. Bill after bill was brought forward when it was found how useless it was to brand the tubs, but so far not a suggestion has been made which promises a way out of the difficulty, unless it is to compel oleo makers to color their product a distinctive tint, such as green or pink. It is not possible for the dairymen to keep an inoleo if he buys there, and now that all attempts to prove oleo sufficiently dele-terious to health to warrant the law in forbidding its manufacture have failed, no alternative is left. If the opponents of oleo cannot devise some means of letting the public know that it is not buying butter the business will go on doubling the public was a left to be a left t ling every year, as it has done since 1878. Dealers in real butter contend that not 5 per cent of the business now done in what they were buying. Some months ago a tub of oleo was boldly marked as such in Washington Market and exposed for sale. Thousands of pounds of oleo were sold as butter every day all around it, but for weeks no one would buy from it, but for weeks no one would buy from this honestly marked tub. At last one man bought a pound and took it away for purpose of chemical analysis, he said. The experiment showed that victory was with the genuine butter dealers could they compel honesty in retailing oleo. The question is, can they do anything of the kind? That the majority of New York grocers sell oleo for butter was proved by the result of an examination made of thirty samples recently bought. proved by the result of an examination made of thirty samples recently bought at first-class groceries. The prices varied from 21 to 33 cents, some grocers charg-ing more for oleo than others charged for genuine butter, the object being to prevent suspicion. Of the thirty samples ten proved to be genuine butter, the other twenty containing little or no butter at all. In all cases careful inspection was made of the shop to find any indica-but no oleo brands or signs were visible. BUTTER-MEN'S STORIES. Some of the experts who have testified before the committee have rather surprized the committee have rather sur-prized the public, as when a veteran butter man confesses that he cannot tell oleo from genuine butter without a chemical test, and when it is admitted that a tub of oleo recently carried off the first prize for butter at a dairy show in Utica. The experts for the oleo men have testified that no cases of sickness from eating oleo have been known and from eating oleo have been known, and even butter champions have been obliged to confess that good eleo is better than bad butter. The elec experts also contend that the stories of the use of filthy fats and of the slaughter-house products of deceased animals are absurdly untrue, because the health impectors do not allow diseased animals to be slaughtered here, and good fresh butchers' fat is as cheap a material as on he wanted. cheap a material as can be wanted. A wonderful story of the way in which the fat for oleo makers was gathered may perhaps be remembered as follows: "Stakes were driven inside the London sewers. The passing current of filth left a deposit of greasy matter on the stakes; once a day men came and scraped the deposit of into pails. After the proper deposit off into palls. After the proper treatment this grease appeared upon the table as dairy butter." The experts denounce this story and similar ones as an invention of the dairyman, because it would cost more to purify and deodorize such stuff than it would be worth as butter. The cheapest material for making begus butter, say the experts, is good fresh fat or lard, and the purer and sweeters is the better butter it makes. The fresh fat or lard, and the purer and sweeter it is the better butter it makes. The longer the investigation goes on the more hopeless appears the daiyman's position, for while it is shown that real butter might be a great deal dearer were it not for coleo, no exidence has been brought forward to prove that the artificial stuff is deleterious to health in any way. The committee have received no anggestions of value as to the means of stopping the sale of cleo as butter, and

A Subterranean Mystery. On Mr. Nicholas Colvin's place, at Halsellville, has been heard for some time a roaring noise, and it was not till whence this sound came was short distance from his residence is the main road, and following the fence for about a quarter of a mile, parallel with the road, you arrive at the place where this noise issues forth from the ground. Smoke arises in dense columns and for a distance of twenty yards of this apparent hole the ground is in a heated condition. The people around about, especially the negroes, are in the wildest state of terror, thinking as usual that the judgment day is at hand. The whites, ployed, the process for making oleo and short distance from his residence is the ilso, are at a loss to explain the phenomenop. On last Tuesday a party assem bled at this threatening volcano with spades, shovels, &c., prepared to dig for the mystery. •We were informed by two of the 'participants in the affair that a depth of eight feet was reached, when by the smoke, heat an threatening explos-ion, as they thought, it was found im-proceed to dig further. So the mystery remains still unsolved. Some think that t is indeed a volcano and others, that it is a geyser from the vapors which arise and the moistened state of the earth surrounding it. The country is hilly and rolling-some of the hills reaching almost the proportions of a mountain. The soil is of igneous formation. We have as our informants, our former Representative in the State Legislature, Mr. John B. Cornwell, and Mr. Sam McAfee, both reliable and respectable men .-Chester Bulletin.

A Man of Great Vitality.

tainly has more vitality than any man we ever saw, and can now, when not suffering too much from his old wound, do as much work at his trade in a day, as any carpenter in the country.—Pickens Sentinel.

A singular scene was presented in the House, growing out of the unseating of the Virginia Readjuster, Mayor, in favor of Garrison, the contestant. When a vote was reached on the resolution reported by the committee on privileges and elections not a single negative vote was heard, but the Honse unanimously decided against the sitting member. As Mr. Garrison advanced down the main aisle to receive the oath of office Mayo, aisle to receive the oath of office Mayo, hat in hand, was observed quietly stealing out by a side door from the hall. Nobody on the floor paid any attention to his movements, and he was suffered to depart in peace. During Mayo's stay in Congress he had become very unpopular among his associates and this may in a measure explain why none of his colleagues even voted against his expulsion.

An Agricultural Bass.

Now, why is not the agricultural world like an orchestra? The keen, sharp scientists and theories dash out in adsults. They are like the violin and the cornet—they receive all the credit. But their plans are never perfect, never are taken up till the nyricultural base comes rolling in the shape of the practice results worked out by plain, honest far-

The agricultural bars is an absolute and back they will come to the bass for help. We slow thinkers who can not keep up with these brilliant ones, can do our own part at least. We can work out their schemes carefully, and when we find they will not work, come in with a perfect roar upon the agricultural bass.-Live Stock Journal.

Ambition, Selfishness and False Pride.

Ambition is a very good thing to have you don't have too much of it. It is like quinine-good in small doses; if too much is taken it is apt to have a bad effect upon the head. Ambition is a dif-ficult thing to define; cruelty, selfishness and false pride are its first consins. Am-bition, in ill-balanced natures, makes them cruel; the possessor will step to the prize over the quivering bodies of his competitors—physically speaking, in by gone ages; figuratively, in this nine-teenth century—without a qualm of re-gret, except that the guerdon is not great-er than it is, and without compassion for those who have fallen in the struggles. Of selfishness there are many kinds; the corked with a glass stopper kind. Of false pride there is only one kind-but that is the meanest kind manufactured. False pride will tell a young man to steal rather than to beg; to lie concerning his prospects rather than to tell his friends he has been unwise and is in straits. The young man who arrives in a city without any friends, registers at the best hotel, and has his mail from home addressed there, taking his board out of his prospects for getting work, will be very likely to get himself into the papers as a hotel beat, and be obliged to have as a hotel test, and be obliged to have his letters addressed to the jail. The young man who starts out in life with the idea that in a few years he will own the whole earth and a few acres of the next field, may have to come round at the last minute and beg for so much as a seat on the fence. "Make haste slowly" is a wise proverb; its wisdom is proved by the test of experience. Rome was wit: not built in a day, nor even a great many towns of lesser importance in history. The only thing that ever was built in day is a young man's air castle, and we all know of its durability.—Newsboys' Appeal.

Twenty years ago last August, B. F. Boggs, of this County, was shot in battle in Virginia. The ball entered near the point of the left shoulder, passed through his body and came out under the right arm. The wound was a terrible one, and would have killed almost any ordinary man. But Mr. Boggs recovered and has worked at his trade, carpentry, since the war. His wound commenced paining him recently and rose. Last week Dr. Bramlett lanced the rising, and a few days thereafter a piece of bone, about 25 inches long worked out of the orifice made by the Dr.'s lancent. Mr. Boggs is now up and will soon be able to work now up and will soon be able to work as he obtains one perfect revolution, be it again. In addition to the above severe ever so slow, his task is practically finagain. In addition to the above severe wound received in the war, some nine years ago he was stabbed by a drunken man ir the abdomen, and his entrails protruded from the wound. He caught them up in his hand, walked to a drug store near by and had them placed back and the wound sewed up. He then mounted his mule and rode home, a distance of six miles. Within three weeks time he was well and at work. He certainly has more vitality than any man

CITIZEN OF MACON, GA.

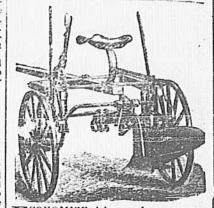

In August, 1881, nearly three years ago, my so, who was at that time living at Clinton, Ga., can over to see me with the said intelligence that he wife was in the last stages of consumption and that her physician had pronounced her case hopeles. I went immediately over, and I cli the nothing could be done. She was coughing and nothing could be done. She was coughing and spitting incressantly, and at times would discharge from her lungs a large quantity of page of mange—could not sleep or retain anything on her stongach, and was, in fact, in the last stages of the discase. This was about the time you began to steverize Brewer's Lung Restorer, and as my so expressed a desire to give it to his wife, two eithree bottles were procured and with scarcely a vestige of hope we commenced giving it to her is small desce, gradually increasing the quantity ustill the prescribed dos, was reached. She began to daily, until she was finally restored to life and health, and is to-day perhaps in better health as wallows of Brewer's Lung Restorer (which she heart before. She is subject to colds, but a few swallows of Brewer's Lung Restorer which that ever without relieves her immediately.
